On The Way

The Seven Last Words: I thirst

He had thirsted before. Early in his ministry he passed through Samaria and, tired from his journey, sat down beside a well. It was about Noon. He said to the Samaritan woman who came to draw water, "Give me a drink." The ensuing conversation revealed not just his thirst but hers as well. He said to her, "If you knew the gift of God and who is saying to you, 'Give me a drink,' you would have asked him and he would have given you living water."

The encounter at the well reveals what's normative in the Christian life. Jesus' physical thirst was a sign of that deeper spiritual, divine thirst for us – the longing of his Sacred Heart. He thirsts for our faith. Our attention to his thirst in turn awakens us to us our spiritual emptiness and our own thirst for what he has to give. So the Samaritan woman says on our behalf, "Sir, give me this water." Jesus asks for water and offers it. His thirst quenches thirst: it's refreshing to know that God thirsts for us. Our very seeking to slake the thirst of God quenches our own thirst.

Once again, it's about Noon and he thirsts. Or, rather, he still thirsts. But now on the Cross he thirsts in the extreme, physically and spiritually. The loss of blood, the heat of the midday sun, and the exertion of carrying the cross have all provoked a terrible dryness. The Psalmist had foretold this: "Like water my life drains away...As dry as a potsherd is my throat; my tongue cleaves to my palate." This extreme physical thirst is a sign – a sacrament – of his deeper, spiritual thirst for us.

Centuries before, the Psalmist had sung, "My heart and flesh cry out for the living God" (Ps 84:2). Now in the sacred humanity of Jesus Christ, God himself in effect speaks similar words to us: "My heart and flesh cry out for you." I thirst. In a strict accounting of justice, our response to God's goodness is something owed him, who is all good and deserving of all our love. But more importantly, God desires – even to the point of thirsting for – our love. He is not merely a judge demanding an accounting but the divine Lover seeking our love.

Jesus continues to thirst. "I thirst" expresses not just a temporal but an eternal about God. Because his thirst is not bound by time, we can seek to satisfy it in the here and now. We do so first of all by our prayers. Those acts of trust and devotion, those expressions of repentance and love, no matter how noble or feeble, all bring him some consolation. They respond to his cry for our faith and love.

We respond by our acts of charity. In the convent chapels of the Missionaries of Charity (Mother Teresa's nuns), there is always a large crucifix on the wall with the words "I thirst" inscribed beside it. That's a summary of Mother Teresa's spirituality, which focused on satisfying the thirst of Christ by finding and serving him in the poorest of the poor. So, where in your life does Jesus thirst for love? Who is it that needs your attention, time, kind word, and assistance?

"I thirst," he cries out from the Cross. Even as he thirsts, he produces from his side what alone can satisfy all human thirst: "[O]ne soldier thrust his lance into his side, and immediately blood and water flowed out." The closer we draw to the Cross to satisfy his thirst, the more we are bathed in his Blood and immersed in his saving waters. The thirsting one quenches.

– Fr. Scalia
